

OFFICE MARKET OVERVIEW

MACYN SCHOLZ, Director of Research

Q2 of 2023 saw the vacancy rate in Metro Vancouver climb even higher throughout the quarter, hitting over 10% in the downtown core. While the amount of sublease space on the market came down, this indicates that mostly headlease space is now contributing to the increase in vacancies. Some tenants could be experiencing a delay between when the market felt the effects of a soft recession and initiating a cost-cutting approach. We expect to see vacancies increase further over 2023, specifically downtown, as headlease and sublease space continues to hit the market. However, the fundamentals remain strong and there is confidence that the Vancouver office market will bounce back in the coming years.
